Week 17: Worksheet 3

Directions: A new school assignment is to write a fictional story about planning a crime. Jaxson is writing about a hijacking. Help her fill in the missing to complete his report.

Though planning a real crime is not something that should ever be done, thinking about the logistics of such a thing can be interesting. For example, I have always been obsessed with airplanes and _____ (clandestine, aviation, hijack) in general so I would likely consider trying to _____ (hijack, stark, fuselage) a large plane. First, I would need to find a way to _____ (disguise, stark, breach) security. This would be tough with all the scanners, metal detectors, and guards present today. If it were possible, then I would have to have a _____ (offence, aviation, disguise) that changed the shape of my face, changed my hair color, and changed my name on a passport. This disguise would get me onto the airplane where I could sit in the _____ (fuselage, aviation, negotiation) in my seat until we were airborne. Then, I would take a _____ (stark, hostage, hijack) or two until I had _____ (exile, breach, commandeered) the plane and had total control.

While I do not plan on trying to take over a plane, I would be willing to take part in a _____ (negotiation, horrific, stark) to get some things I wanted. If I got caught, then I would likely be _____ (stark, horrific, indicted) and possibly sent into _____ (exile, breach, haul) in some dark prison for life. I guess if I weigh out the options, I will work for what I want, not commit some _____ (stark, horrific, hostage) _____ (offence, breach, disguise).
