Week 51: Worksheet 3

Directions: Ben had to write about his favorite movie. Help him fill in the missing words to complete the story.

My favorite movie is an old _____ (concession, thriller, evoke) classic. It is scary and creepy, called Misery. The movie is based on a book I also love. I think the most interesting thing when books are made into movies is how the _____ (soundtrack, blooper, replicate) adds to the action. It is hard to believe that the right noise or music can _____ (reel, replicate, evoke) such strong feelings as you watch.

Another important aspect of turning a book into a movie is choosing the right _____ (relic, concession, cast) because a character that does not match the personality started in the book will ruin a movie. Finally, to create a decent movie that people want to see, the props need to look real, even though they are not. Like a movie about an archeologist who finds a _____ (blooper, relic, thriller) should not grab something that has a battery, lights, or plastic. I guess a movie also has to be able to draw a crowd on the _____ (premiere, concession, turnout) weekend so the company knows they are _____ (evoke, grossing, genres) enough to make real money on the production.

In my favorite movie, a car accident leaves a famous writer injured on a frozen, deserted road. A crazy fan finds him and takes him home where she traps him, torturing him, and forcing him to write. It is a creepy, old school type thriller, but I still love it. When my local theater had a midnight showing, there was a huge _____ (choreographer, turnout, showcase) to enjoy the overstuffed _____ (concession, blooper, reel) stand and the movie. I cannot wait until they do it again, even with a different movie.
