My uncle works as an assistant to a choreographer who helps create dances and moves for movies and theater productions. He has had to create dances that evoke all types of feelings in a variety of genres. At times, my uncle has helped a cast of famous people learn to dance and sometimes he just helps put together a showcase to demonstrate options.

Last week, I was invited by my uncle to a new movie premiere. It was a thriller that was believed to be capable of grossing millions when released. I was excited to get all dressed up and walk the long carpet into the theater. The turnout was impressive with every seat filled. Even the concession stand offered free snacks for every viewer. The opening reel showed a historic looking location and the soundtrack made the viewer understand that something spooky was about to happen. The movie was amazing. I even screamed at a few scary parts.

As the lights came up, ushers were passing out a replicate of the haunted relic to everyone who attended. I have mine sitting on my desk still, even though that was a year ago. Still, my favorite part was as the lights were coming up and a reel of movie bloopers was playing on the screen. It was hilarious to see actors who were supposed to be scared suddenly start laughing because a killer sneezed at a quiet moment or something else just as silly. I hope one day to get a chance to attend another event.
